When a brāhmaṇa—a seeker after truth— masters two dhammas (the practice of samatha and vipassanā meditation), then in that knowing one, all bonds are destroyed.

Excerpts from Letters Written to Babu Bhaiya

Vipassana Camp at Baracakia, Bihar

In order to keep Sayagyi U Ba Khin informed about the camps being held in India, the following letter, written over 50 years ago by Respected Goenkaji to his elder brother Babulal, or Babu Bhaiya as he was called, illustrates how camps were conducted in those days, and how Respected Guruji conducted these initial camps with great equanimity and loving-kindness as he guided meditation students on how to walk on the path of Dhamma.

— Editor
Barachakia, Bihar
23 August 1970

Babu Bhaiya,

Pranam!

The camp concluded successfully yesterday, and I was filled with mudita (sympathetic joy) as I shared the enormous merits that were generated with with Respected Gurudev and Ma Sayama, all of you and the Dhamma brothers and Dhamma sisters as well as those who helped in the ashram activities. Truly it was the strength of Metta Bhavana of Respected Gurudev and Ma Sayama that such a large camp came to a successful conclusion without any obstacles. During the course, I had some reservations about one or two meditators, but they turned out to be baseless, providing me with great joy.

All the meditators here are filled with paramis (wholesome qualities that lead to liberation), less or more.

For the initial 2 to 3 days, I had a cough and a cold, but it was tolerable. Arrangements for food, etc. were well taken care of, so I was comfortable as I considered how to manage larger camps in the future. No one expected such a large number of students, certainly not more than 20 to 25 people. But the numbers kept rising, and by the third day, when people continued to arrive, we had to limit the student numbers. This was despite my not wanting to refuse anyone, but we were helpless due to a shortage of space. Many who had to be turned away were disappointed and teary-eyed.

The arrangements for this camp were made by the general manager of the only sugar mill in this area, Sardar Singh Kothari. He is from Udaipur and an expert at his job. He is especially good at turning ailing mills around, making them strong and successful. He is a gentleman, well educated and far from any bigotry. Being very social, he is well known in this area. Due to some past dhammic association, he and his wife attended a camp that was held in Sarnath, and they both became eager to hold another camp either in Sarnath or at his place.

At a time when he has been shouldering such a major responsibility of looking after a mill that is running at full steam, he has remained enthusiastic about organising a Vipassana course at his house and attending it as well. His progress during the course was affected, yet his enthusiasm did not dim. He eagerly expressed that whenever I leave Burma to settle in India, I should settle in this region so that people here can benefit from Dhamma. He is taking me to Patna tomorrow to meet his friends for a Dhamma talk.

The concentration he reached in the three days of Anapana was very good, and his mind was filled with joy and peace. After Vipassana was given, other local matters of concern continued to draw his attention, besides those of being a host looking after the comforts of over 50 people staying in his house.

His wife, Krishna, had her share of difficulties as well. Despite repeated assurances not to worry, her concerns for other meditators' comforts filled her mind. There were just too many people in the house due to the limited bathroom and shower areas. Having meals on time was another issue, and maintaining the course time schedule was a challenge. Though there were others to take care of this, she remained concerned. A gentle woman, her faith and nurturing spirit were strong. Due to this, both of them, though unshaken in their faith, slackened in their meditation practice.

One elderly gentleman had difficulty. His mental condition was unstable, and his memory was weak. During the entire course period, there were barely ten minutes when he sat still and steady. Yet he surprised me once. When I did not consider it prudent to give him Vipassana for 5 or 6 days, he became despondent. When I gave him Vipassana, he managed to sit still for the entire hour. Upon being asked about his experience, he said that far away in a cave, he kept on seeing a lamp, which was very pleasant and immersed in that his mind neither wandered nor did his body move. Perhaps due to the ripening of some past kamma, he experienced this, but otherwise throughout the entire course he remained distracted and a source of distraction for other meditators too.

In truth, the work of mental concentration should begin at a young age in order to prevent facing regret in later years. We come across many examples of weak elderly students and their inability to control their minds, and one is filled with compassion. It is best that one gets firmly established in Dhamma by middle age.

There was a notable family in this camp – Shiv Shankar, who had come with his wife Parvati and a married daughter, Pushpa. Earlier, he and his daughter had attended a public talk in Calcutta at the conclusion of a Vipassana camp and had requested to join a camp. Possibly, she had urged her parents to join. The couple were both suffering immensely as their only son, who was young and newly married, had recently died in an accident and their lives had turned meaningless. He is the general manager of a large sugar mill in Majhulia in northern Bihar. A well-reputed person, he was in the process of establishing a drum making factory for his son. The machines had arrived from overseas and the factory building was ready. But everything had come to a standstill. Now his heart was no longer in the project. He is a political leader in Bihar, but that too holds no interest for him anymore as he weeps all day. The pain of losing his beloved son was such that his nerves got affected and one hand trembled constantly.

During the course, they practised as instructed, with good results as Vipassana awakened well in both of them and their daughter. So long as his mind was immersed in the depths of Vipassana, the tremors in his hand would either stop or be greatly reduced. This too deepened their faith, and they persisted. As they were strictly religious, some aspects of the discourses bothered them, but by and large, they took it well. At the end of the camp, the husband said, "No one can return my lost son, but you have truly given me a new way to look at life and this has certainly reduced the sharpness of my pain." Seeing the couple's smiling faces as they said goodbye was a moment of satisfaction for me.

Ten days after the camp, I was in a restaurant with Sardar Singh Kothari in Patna when the couple's lawyer chanced by. Being familiar with Kothari-ji, he came over and asked him, "What medicine did you give to our friend Shankar-ji?" He continued, "It seems as if life has freshly returned to him; he looks so young and vibrant, and he is enthusiastic about starting up work again. He has come to Patna to ensure that his name remains on the state election list."

This pleased me, as I had not been in touch with him. His worldview had changed on the strength of Dhamma, and certainly, in time, this would grow. I remember the deep sense of gratitude on the faces of his wife and daughter while leaving the camp. They too had benefited well.

Another family joined the camp: a husband, wife, twin sons, an elder brother and a father. They all progressed well. Vipassana was also awakened in the 12-year-old twins.

Bhikkhu Shilbhadra, who had joined many camps earlier, came with samanera Buddhasharan, and both benefited well. Mr Jeetlal, from Pratapgarh, came with his wife, aunt, and uncle. With him came a nun, Sujata, and all benefited well.

On the day the camp was to commence, Mahadev Kejriwal had returned to Muzaffarpur from Nepal with his daughter Shanta, and upon hearing about the upcoming camp, they participated and certainly benefited.

Others in the group were all from Rajasthan, mostly women, and they all dived deep into the Ganges of Dhamma. Another person, a Bihari named Babulal Shah, became particularly enraptured with Dhamma. He wanted to join the camp, but there was no one at home to take care of his shop. He wanted to leave the shop keys with his neighbour, who could open the shop and deal with the buyers as they came in till Babulal returned from the course. On the penultimate day, the neighbour refused to take this responsibility, and Babulal spent the night tossing in bed. The next day, despite the neighbour's adamant refusal to take charge of the shop, Babulal threw the shop key into his house and came for the course. He too benefited well.

Vidyadhar was a Rajasthani boy. Later, I came to know that, having learnt Kundalini yoga under a renunciate earlier, his mind had become deranged. By the time I discovered his difficulties, it had become difficult for me to ask him to leave the course. Fortunately, there was no mishap. He benefited well. Of pleasant disposition, he shifted to Mumbai for a job, and started coming for the early morning meditation sitting every Sunday at 7.30. After some time, he returned with his mother to attend a camp in Bodh Gaya. But they came a couple of days after the course had begun, and giving permission became difficult due to their late arrival and total lack of space. They returned home, teary-eyed and keenly disappointed. But I was helpless.

Two successful businessmen, Ishwar Prasad Seksaria and Tolaram Tulsian of Chakia, also sat for the course with good results.

Women participants, on the whole, benefited greatly; some went deep into meditation, and all were deeply moved. A day prior to the camp, I gave a public talk, which was hard-hitting on blind faith and rites and rituals. It was held in the local temple and was largely attended by women. I saw that they were surprisingly drawn to Dhamma. No one seemed offended. They seemed to be drawing on a deep sense of faith in pure Dhamma. They remained eager to learn.

The most developed meditator on this course was Mohini Devi, wife of Shobharam-ji. Her meditative vibrations emanated a cool and tranquil wholesomeness. As deep as this elderly woman's maternal feelings were, so was her deep sense of faith. There is unparalleled parami in this deeply dhammic meditator. I felt a sense of reassurance for her future.

This being the land where Lord Buddha traversed extensively, I would not be surprised if these women, in some birth, had come into contact with Dhamma and have now come here to progress further on the path.

This Barachakia camp has been one of unusual experiences, such as the need to take care of large numbers of meditators. Also on this course, there were, on the one hand, illiterate meditators suffused with excessive emotionalism and devotion, while on the other hand, highly intelligent meditators were given to well-formulated and logical arguments, making for a very varied gathering. On this course as well, there was one meditator who became overwhelmed upon seeing her god, making it difficult for me to bring her out of it, while another could see divine lights or another hear divine sounds, making it hard for me to impress upon them that these were but milestones on the way and not the final destination. At times, a person was restless with the pain of their ailments, yet another person was lost in their superstitious beliefs. Taking such a diverse group of people forward and guiding them into pure Dhamma was an experience in itself.

Yours,

Satya Narayan Goenka.

DHAMMA DOHAS

Agañita janmoṃ meñ sabhī, pūrṇa pāramī hoyā;

To usa sātṭvika sattva meñ, bodhi avatarita hoyā.

In countless lifetimes whenever paramis are fulfilled;
Bodhi then manifests in those pure wholesome ones.

Jaba samyaka saṃbuddha kā, jaga meñ udgama hoyā;

Dharaṭī ke ākāśa ke, prāṇī harakhita hoṇya.

When a Samyak Sambuddha arises in the world;
The beings of the earth and sky rejoice.

Kaṭe moha ajñāna kī, andhakāra kī rāta;

Hoya ujālā dharama kā, maṅgala hoyā prabhāta.

The darkness of ignorance is broken, so also the dark night (is dissolved); And Dhamma shines forth, as the blessed dawn rises.

Bhava-bhava bhaṭakata sattva kā, jaba bhava antima hoyā;

Apanā bhī maṅgala sadhe, bahujaṇa maṅgala hoyā.

Wandering through the universe, finally comes the last birth of a Purified One; This is the moment of one's own welfare and the welfare of innumerable others.
